ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The checklist presented here is an integral part of the web-based Matching Needs and Resources mechanism, which UNIDIR has been developing with the financial support of the Governments of Canada, Ireland and the United States of America. The content of the checklist was tested in two regional case studies, one in East Africa, funded by the Governments of Canada and the United States of America, and the second in the South Pacific Islands, funded by the Governments of Australia and New Zealand. UNIDIR is very grateful to all the donors, including the Governments of Austria and Finland, that have supported the different phases of UNIDIR's research on SALW assistance.

A number of individuals and organizations provided excellent advice, feedback and suggestions on the checklist. Every effort was made to incorporate their diverse views and opinions and we apologize for any potential mistakes or misrepresentations made when incorporating this input. UNIDIR would like especially to thank Holger Anders and Ilhan Berkol at the Groupe de recherche et d'information sur la paix et la sécurité; Michael Hasenau; Masamichi Ito and Yasumitsu Kida; Miguel Barreiro Laredo at the Central American Small Arms Control Programme; Patrick McCarthy at the United Nations Coordinating Action on Small Arms; Marc-Antoine Morel at the United Nations Development Programme, Bureau for Crisis Prevention and Recovery; Robert Parker and the team at Saferworld; Daniël Prins, Antonio Evora and Tak Mashiko at the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs; Chris Wall at Papua New Guinea Customs; Nathalie Weizmann at the International Committee of the Red Cross; and Adrian Wilkinson at Explosive Capabilities Limited.

Research assistants Philipp Annawitt, Seraina Caduff and Leslie Gailey deserve warm thanks, as do the UNIDIR staff who saw the checklist through to publication: Christiane Agboton-Johnson, Anita Blétry, Nicolas Gérard, Yvette Issar, Jason Powers, Isabelle Roger and Kerstin Vignard.

FOREWORD

States recognize that international assistance is essential for the effective implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, having devoted a full section to this issue when they agreed the instrument in 2001. The challenge, however, comes in the identification, allocation and coordination of this international assistance. While a number of valuable programmes and achievements have been made, the results of the research conducted by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) in 2006 indicated that the majority of the US$ 660 million allocated as international assistance covered only a limited number of issues in a limited number of countries.

Responding to the call of states to improve the identification, allocation and coordination of assistance for implementing the Programme of Action and addressing small arms and light weapons (SALW) more broadly, and with the financial support of the Governments of Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland, Ireland, New Zealand and the United States of America, which have each supported various aspects of this work, UNIDIR has undertaken a multi-year programme of work that has produced a number of activities aimed at helping states to better match the needs for international SALW assistance with available resources. UNIDIR is thus proud to present the checklist found herein, which represents the results of one such activity.

The checklist can be used as a tool in its own right to help states determine areas for advancing activities to combat, eradicate and prevent the illicit trade in SALW. The checklist is also an integral part of the web-based matching needs and resources mechanism, designed by UNIDIR and incorporated into the Programme of Action Implementation Support System administered by the United Nations Office of Disarmament Affairs.

The checklist is a concrete example of how action-oriented research can have tangible and practical utility for states. Effective and efficient allocation of SALW resources is a priority for states, and I see this checklist as being an essential contribution to supporting states in their efforts to implement Section III of the PoA. I would like to challenge states to see what sort of notable and measurable progress we can all make to combat, eradicate and prevent this scourge with a better articulated vision of how to make best use of national and international resources.

INTRODUCTION

WHAT IS THE CHECKLIST?

Presented here is a checklist of questions that states can use to help them to identify areas where international assistance could help to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons (SALW).

The checklist aims to support Section III of the United Nations Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All its Aspects (PoA), which deals with international assistance, cooperation and capacity-building.

The checklist is designed to help states consider the types of activities they may need to undertake to address SALW in their territory, whether through the allocation and use of national resources or through international assistance. Not all questions or issues in the checklist are relevant for all states, which experience SALW problems differently and which are at varying levels of progress in PoA implementation. For some states only certain issues will apply, while others will face obligations resulting from their membership in regional organizations or adherence to certain instruments. It is therefore up to individual states to compare the content of the checklist against their national policies, and international and regional obligations and commitments in order to determine if and what types of international assistance could be sought.

The checklist is an integral part of the web-based Matching Needs and Resources (MNR) mechanism developed by UNIDIR and hosted by the Programme of Action Implementation Support System, administered by the United Nations Office of Disarmament Affairs. States that would like to receive SALW assistance can complete the checklist online, while donors are asked to supply information on the types of assistance they consider providing. Donors and implementing agencies can use the site to identify which states are requesting which types of assistance. The mechanism informs users when the assistance priorities of a requesting state are in line with their particular interests. States and implementing agencies are encouraged to access the MNR mechanism on the Programme of Action Implementation Support System website at <www.poa-iss.org>.

Part 2 of this publication contains the complete checklist.

WHAT CAN THE CHECKLIST BE USED FOR?

States can use the checklist to help them formulate requests for assistance through project proposals, in discussions with donor states and implementing agencies, and in preparing national reports on PoA implementation. While the checklist can be used in paper format, completing the checklist online allows donors and implementing agencies to see immediately the assistance that is requested by states.

The checklist can also be used to identify where knowledge gaps exist in the different thematic areas, indicating to the users what kind of research, needs assessments and surveys may be required. A completed checklist can also support the development of national SALW strategies or action plans.

The checklist aims to help states to identify where SALW assistance is needed—it is not intended to be used as a baseline for evaluating a state's performance on PoA implementation. If a state's current systems and practices to address SALW are deemed adequate and international assistance is not required, then the checklist may be used more as an information resource or reference document.

HOW CAN THE CHECKLIST BE USED?

National Coordinating Bodies (NCBs) or similar agencies are encouraged to share and discuss the different themes found in the checklist with national experts and stakeholders, including implementing agencies and civil society, to compare the content of the checklist against national policy, practice and objectives.

If respondents answer "yes" or "not applicable" to a question on the checklist, then international assistance is either not necessary in that case or the question is not relevant to the state's situation, practice or policy.

The collation of "no" or "inadequate" responses creates a profile or summary of the types of activities that the state could consider implementing. The state must then determine if the activities are ones that it wants to undertake and, if so, if these activities could be implemented using national resources and expertise, or if international assistance would need to be sought.

Given the interconnected nature of SALW issues, the thematic groupings of the checklist are somewhat arbitrary. The best way to approach SALW is holistically by considering all stages in the life cycles of SALW, and by recognizing the relationships among different SALW themes. For instance, aspects related to transfers, marking, record-keeping and tracing, destruction, and oversight of law enforcement officials are all necessary elements of an effective approach to stockpile management and security. Certain questions in the checklist are repeated across thematic groupings in order to capture these interrelationships. However, NCBs are still encouraged to consider the needs for assistance in each of the thematic groupings in light of a broader SALW strategy.

WHICH INSTRUMENTS AND DOCUMENTS ARE REFLECTED IN THE CHECKLIST?

The content of the checklist extends beyond the PoA in certain cases, as the PoA does not elaborate the steps or measures necessary to achieve many of its commitments. The checklist thus also draws on other international and regional SALW instruments, best practice documents and operational guidelines in order to help states determine the steps to take toward implementing the PoA. Below is a list of these other sources.
