(Decree No. 465 of the PRC State Council, signed by Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council, on 29 Apr 2006) The regulations consist of 28 articles. (Full text: RMRB, 27 May 06)

Safety Control Regulations Regarding Civil Explosives. These regulations will go into effect on 1 September 2006. (Decree No. 466 of the PRC State Council, signed by Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council) (RMRB, 25 May 06) The Chinese government on 24 May issued stricter new controls and regulations on the civil use and storage of explosives after a series of accidental explosions in recent years. The new Safety Control Regulations Regarding Civil Explosives, passed by the State Council, will come into effect on 1 September. The new regulations are based on the 1984 regulations, but comprehensively revised and amended so as to eliminate possible risks, said a State Council source. The new regulations require: - a government licence to produce, sell, purchase and transport explosives; - bank transactions for the sale and purchase of explosives, with a ban on cash and barter transactions; - storage in designated warehouses where smoking and combustible materials are banned, as are sleeping and other activities unrelated to its purpose. - immediate police notification if the explosives are lost or stolen. The government will also establish a database to monitor all transactions and movements of explosives. All manufacturers, vendors and users are to establish a registration system that ensures timely recording the quantities and types of explosives and transfer of the information to the government database. In the worst of the recent accidents, 34 people were killed when three tons of illegally stored explosives detonated in a hospital compound in Yuanping City, in north China's Shanxi Province, on 10 April. Four people were arrested in connection with the accident on charges of illegally trading, storing and transporting explosives. (XNA, 24 May 06)

Regulations on the Protection of Dissemination Rights in Information Networks, approved at the State Council executive meeting on 10 May 2006. Beijing, 29 May: The Chinese government has passed a new regulation to ban the uploading and downloading of Internet material without the copyright holder's permission. Under the regulation, effective from 1 July, anyone uploading texts, and performance, sound and video recordings to the Internet for downloading, copying or other use, must acquire the permission of the copyright owners and pay the required fee. The production, import and supply of devices that are capable of evading or breaching technical measures of copyright protection and technical services are prohibited under the regulation. The regulation was drawn up on the principle that it must balance the interests of copyright owners, Internet service providers and users of the copyrighted works, said an official with the Legal Affairs Office of the State Council. ... Violations of copyright through the Internet usually involved relatively small sums of money, so the regulation had adopted the international practice of "notice and delete" to handle disputes, the official said. Deletion or change of digital material were prohibited under the regulation. Copyright owners could send those breaching copyright a written notice and ask Internet providers to delete their works or links to their works, the regulations said. Internet providers should delete the content and links upon receiving the written notice from the copyright holders. The new regulation provides for a fine up to 100,000 yuan (12,500 US dollars) and confiscation of computer equipment for those who breach copyright. China is the world's second-largest Internet market after the United States with more than 110 million users. Last September, baidu.com, a leading Chinese search engine, was successfully sued by a Chinese music firm for 68,000 yuan (8,400 US dollars) because baidu's search function violated the Shanghai-based company's copyright. Last month, a technology company developing MP3 download software, Kuro, was sued in the first case involving P2P (peer to peer) downloading in China. (XNA, 29 May 06)
