Compulsory Education Law of the People's Republic of China, adopted at the 4th meeting of the 6th NPC on 12 April 1986 and revised at the 22nd meeting of the 10th NPC Standing Committee on 29 June 2006. It will come into effect on September 1, 2006. (Presidential Decree No. 52, signed by State President Hu Jintao on 29 June 2006) (Full text: RMRB, 30 Jun 06) This law consist of eight chapters with 63 articles. The NPC Standing Committee on 29 June 2006 adopted the amendment to the Compulsory Education Law, aiming to give equal compulsory education to children in cities and in the countryside. The revised law aims to give children in both cities and the countryside nine years of free compulsory education but the tuition charges will not be completely waived for a few years as clauses in the law still have to be approved by the State Council. The expenditures will be jointly shouldered by the central government and local governments. And local governments should put the expenditure for compulsory education in their budgets. Chen Xiaoya, Vice-Minister of Education said if governments fail to pay for the compulsory education in time, they will be disciplined. She said the main aim of the law is to offer equal education to children no matter whether they live in the city or in the countryside. The revised law said the children of migrant workers will enjoy equal education rights as children in cities and the education rights of children with disabilities should be also secured. In cities, education resources, such as teachers, school facilities, programs designs and investment, should be equally allocated among schools.

There will no longer be a division of schools into key schools and common ones, according to the revised law. In a bid to improve education quality in rural schools, the law also requires teachers in urban schools to work in rural schools for a certain time to make up for the inadequate rural education resources. Beijing, 6 July: China has issued its first regulation to standardize the investment activities of the 166 major state-owned enterprises (SOEs) under the Stateowned Assets Supervision and Administration Commission. The regulation described the "significant responsibility of the commission to supervise the investment activities of major SOEs as these companies, with combined assets of 10.6 trillion yuan, had a great bearing on the country's economic health and industrial safety. Although most SOEs already conform to the standards and channel investment into their core businesses, problems such as blind investment and ineffective capital management still exist. About 5 per cent of the 1 trillion yuan invested by major SOEs in 2004 went into sideline businesses. A source with the commission said a few companies had branched into "too many sideline businesses" and failed to make good use of their resources. The regulation will apply only to the most frequent activities such as investment in fixed assets, property rights purchases and investment in long-term stockholder's rights. Other activities, especially complicated monetary investment, will be standardized through other regulations. The document said the right of companies in making independent investment decisions must be respected by the supervising authorities. The role of the commission was "not to make decisions for enterprises", but to "examine and verify their developing strategies, help sharpen their cutting edges by focusing on major business and to secure the value of state-owned assets."It also stipulated that the commission must track the whole process of investment activity so as to identify flaws and suggest feasible improvements.
