Please note:

Election results from provincial-level party congresses confirm that the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) is eliminating a certain number of deputy party chief posts in a continuing effort to streamline governance. An average of three such posts have been cut in China's Liaoning, Henan, Anhui, Shanxi provinces, and in Xinjiang and Tibet autonomous regions.

There will now be only two deputy party head posts in these provinces, one of whom will be the provincial governor. The other deputy party head post will be responsible for party affairs or discipline supervision. Officials serving as party secretaries will no longer occupy posts in fields like the economy, health or education, because these posts overlapped with vice-governor duties.

"It's hard for me to decide who to listen to when there are two leaders," said Wu Xuguang, a construction official in Xiuning County of Anhui Province, in an interview with a Beijing-based newspaper. The thinning of party secretaries will streamline decision-making procedures and enhance governance efficiency, said Wu Zhongmin, a sociology director with the Party School of CCP Central Committee.

Prior to the downsizing, secretaries occupy many posts in the local party standing committee, which is the provincial policy-making body. In the new set-up, secretary posts will be cut and more non-secretary officials brought in to the standing committee. "This will curb the dominance of secretaries in the committee - it is another step taken by the party to realize group governance and democracy," said Liu Suhua, a scholar with the Party School.

Even before the provincial-level reshuffling, re-elections at lower levels had already eliminated thousands of party posts. In central China's Hunan Province alone, over 5,600 deputy party chief posts at the township level were slashed, an average of 2.6 fewer such posts per town, local government sources said.

Nationwide, an average of 200 county-level and 40 city level party posts have been eliminated, according to a report in the latest issue of Southern Weekly. With China determined to deepen political reforms in the first phase of the 11th five-year plan period (2006-2010), the latest provincial party congresses have witnessed a wave of personnel changes nationwide.

The People's Daily has hailed the ongoing party leadership downsizing as a "significant reform", and warned that in the reform, numerous party cadres "will be transferred from important posts or be demoted". The reform will make it much harder for profiteers to capture a government position and help curb corruption, said Wang Guixiu, a scholar with the Party School. (XNA, 3 Nov 06)

Newly Appointed Leaders

Cai Changsong (蔡长松)

Appointed as deputy secretary of the CCP Hainan Provincial Committee in January 1996. He concurrently serves as secretary of its Commission for Discipline Inspection (since April 2002). (http://www.hq.xinhuanet.com/hngov/2006-05/25/content_7089846.htm, accessed 8 Nov 06)

Cai Changsong, born in December 1941, is a native of Wangcheng, Hunan Province. In November 1965, he joined the CCP. From 1962 to 1966, he studied at the Department of Political Education at Hunan Teachers College. From March 1978 to November 1983, he held various posts in the Economic Commission of Changde Prefecture (Hunan). Deaths

Huo Yingdong (Sir Henry Fok Ying-tung, 霍英东) died in a Beijing hospital on 28 October, The property tycoon, who was 83, had fought a long battle with cancer. Huo, „a true patriot“, was elected a vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference in 1993. He is one of the few Hong Kong politicians to have commanded the respect of people across the political spectrum. Beijing mourned the loss of an „intimate friend“. Huo enjoyed direct access to many state leaders, including late patriarch Deng Xiaoping. He was always one step ahead in investing on the mainland, with some projects not necessarily profit-driven. In particular he poured billions into developing his family's hometown Panyu, now part of Guangzhou. In 1983, he opened the White Swan Hotel in Guangzhou, the first five-star joint-venture hotel on the mainland. In the early 1990's, he started to develop the Pearl River estuary island of Nansha. Last year the publicity-shy tycoon donated HK$800 million to the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. He was the founding president of the Hong Kong Real Estate Developers Association and honorary chairman of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce. His son is legislator Timothy Fok Tsun-ting. The funeral was held in Hong Kong on 7 November. (RMRB, 30 Oct 06; SCMP, 29, 30 Oct 06, 1, 7, 8, 11Nov 06)

Russia (Nov 09)

China and Russia signed eight agreements in Beijing to boost bilateral investment, trade and technical cooperation.

The signing of the agreements, covering sectors such as trade, energy, car production and development of infrastructure, marked the beginning of Sino-Russian Investment Promotion Week.

Two of the eight agreements relate to joint mining exploration. The other agreements include the setting up of a car assembly factory, a glass factory and wood processing facilities.

The contracted investment volume from the Chinese side is 800m US dollars.

Addressing the opening ceremony, Chinese Vice-Premier Wu Yi said the China-Russia trade volume was expected to reach 60bn to 80bn US dollars by 2010, and China's total investment volume in Russia will reach its target of 12bn dollars before 2020.

Zhang Xiaoqiang, vice-chairman of the State Development and Reform Commission, said the two countries' cooperation in energy would increase in the future.

Speaking at a Sino-Russian trade forum in Beijing, Zhang said the energy cooperation between the two countries had entered a new phase, especially the joint oil exploration project in Veninsky Block of Sakhalin region and the joint operation of Udmurtneft Petroleum Company.

The government encourages Chinese firms to engage more in the joint exploration of ores of iron, zinc, lead, and copper in regions such as Chita Oblast, and Tuva Republic, Zhang said.

Trade volume between China and Russia reached 29.1bn US dollars in 2005. In the first nine months of this year, the bilateral trade volume totalled 24.64bn dollars, up 18.8 per cent on the previous year.

The Sino-Russian Investment Promotion Week will feature 13 promotional activities aimed at boosting bilateral investment, as part of the "Year of Russia" in China which is scheduled to conclude on 9 November. More than 200 activities were held during the "Year of Russia", which helped strengthen the traditional friendship between the two countries and push forward the China-Russia strategic partnership. International Agreements

China has granted tourist destination status to 26 African countries, according to an action plan endorsed by Chinese and African leaders in Beijing on 5 November.

"With the new decision of the Chinese government to extend the Approved Destination Status (ADS) to nine African countries including Algeria, Cape Verde, Cameroon, Gabon, Rwanda, Mali, Mozambique, Benin and Nigeria, there are now 26 ADS countries in Africa," says the document adopted at the Beijing Summit of the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation, a high-profile gathering of leaders from China and 48 African countries that have diplomatic relations with it.

The number of Chinese tourists to Africa reached 110,000 in 2005, doubling the 2004 figure, according to the Exit-Entry Administration Bureau of the Public Security Ministry.

Yet tourists to Africa currently account for merely five per cent of the total outbound tourists from the world's most populous nation.

In 2005, the Chinese made 31m trips overseas and the figure is expected to grow by 10 per cent this year.

Eyeing the huge potential, governments and travel services in many African countries are wooing Chinese tourists and encouraging more Africans to travel to China.

According to statistics from the World Travel and Tourism Council, the travel and tourism industry in North Africa represents 13.4 per cent of GDP and provides 12 per cent of employment.

In sub-Saharan Africa, the sector contributes eight per cent of GDP and generates 10.5 million jobs, accounting for 6.6 per cent of total employment.

Tourism revenue in Africa is expected to grow by 4.7 per cent annually in real terms between 2007 and 2016.

The Chinese government will extend ADS to more qualified African countries at their request, says the Action Plan. "China-Africa cooperation in the tourism industry will help promote understanding and friendship between their peoples," it says.

Chinese tourists can get visas to African countries within seven working days, according to Lin Bo, an executive with China International Travel Service, the country's largest travel service provider.

The landmark two-day Beijing Summit concluded on 5 November, after two historic documents, a declaration and an action plan for 2007-2009, had been adopted. (XNA, 5 Nov 06)

Hong Kong SAR Agreement with Vietnam (Nov 09)

China's Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) and Vietnam signed a memorandum of understanding in a bid to enhance cultural cooperation, according to a press release.

HKSAR's Secretary for Home Affairs Patrick Ho and Vietnam's Minister for Culture and Information Le Doan Hop signed the pact.

Ho said Hong Kong and Vietnam have forged friendly ties that span many years. "For historical reasons, Hong Kong people have been happily exposed to the Vietnamese culture. Over the years we have had the opportunity to experience the performances of Vietnamese arts groups and the works of Vietnamese artists," he said.

"Vietnam has also been our long-standing partner at the annual Asia Cultural Cooperation Forum since 2003. These cultural exchanges have helped us better understand and celebrate our cultural variations and similarities," he added.

Both officials said their governments will commit to further cultural exchanges by presenting each other's performances or exhibitions in Hong Kong and Vietnam. (XNA, 9 Nov 06)

PRC Laws and Regulations

LIU Jen-Kai

Anti-Money Laundering Law of the People's Republic of China,

adopted at the 24th meeting of the 10th NPC Standing Committee on 31 October 2006. (Presidential Decree No. 56, signed by State President Hu Jintao on 31 October 2006) The law consists of seven chapters with 37 articles. (RMRB, 1 Nov 06; full text of the law: http://news.xinhuanet.com/legal/2006-10/31/content_5273679.htm, accessed 1 Nov 06)

China's top legislature adopted an anti-money laundering law that broadens the definition of money-laundering crimes to include accepting bribes.

The definition of money laundering has been expanded to include corruption and bribe taking, violating financial management regulations and financial fraud.

The law is expected to come into effect on 1 January 2007.

Previously, the law only identified drug trafficking, organized crime, terrorist crimes and smuggling as money laundering crimes.

China's officials and analysts believed the coverage is too narrow. They called for stepping up efforts to combat money laundering, which has risen in recent years along with activities such as embezzlement, drug trafficking and other smuggling.

The law demands financial and some non-financial institutions to maintain record on clients and transaction records and to report large and suspect transactions.

The law offers a legal basis for checking the flow of cash of corrupt officials, said Lang Sheng, a official on criminal law with the NPC Standing Committee.

The People's Bank of China, or central bank, is the nerve centre of the anti-money laundering campaign. Its offices are empowered to monitor and investigate suspect money flows and mete out administrative punishment to employees for allowing the illegal transfer of money

According to the China Anti-Money Laundering Monitoring and Analysis Centre, an office under the central bank set up in 2004, 683 suspicious money laundering cases had been reported to the police by the end of 2005. They involved 137.8bn yuan (17.2bn US dollars) and over 1bn US dollars.

The law does not detail the legal power of the centre, but allows it to gather "necessary information from departments and institutions under the State Council".

The law is also expected to help facilitate China's application to the Financial Action Task Force - a Paris-based inter-governmental body with 33 members that develops and promotes policies to combat money laundering. China became an observer in 2005.

The law also pledges to step up coordination with other countries to combat global money laundering, promising to exchange information with overseas anti-money laundering organizations.

In April, the central bank issued a series of draft regulations designed to boost efforts to rein in money laundering across its banking, securities and insurance sectors.

China began to draft the anti-money laundering law in 2004. (XNA, 31 Oct 06)

Law on Specialized Peasants Cooperatives, adopted at the 24th meeting of the 10th NPC Standing Committee on 31 October 2006. This law will become effective as of 1 July 2007. (Presidential Decree No. 57, signed by State President Hu Jintao on 31 October 2006) (RMRB, 1 Nov 06)

China's top legislature ratified the law on farmers cooperatives to better protect farmers' business interests. The law requires cooperatives to set up an account for every member and define their individual financial rights as a basis for sharing profits and liabilities. It also allows for the prosecution of cooperative directors who misappropriate or embezzle funds.

The law stipulates that cooperatives are organizations for mutual assistance set up by farmers who produce similar products or offer and use similar farming services based on a household contract system. "Rural cooperatives can effectively accelerate the entry of agricultural products into the market, which can help rural households better combat natural and market risks," said Zhang Yongjun, a representative of the National People's Congress.

The draft law, presented to legislators for the first deliberation in June, recognized that household businesses, a major backbone of China's rural economy, have become more vulnerable in the more competitive market. According to the Ministry of Agriculture, China has more than 150,000 rural economic cooperatives, whose 23 million members account for 9.8 per cent of the total rural households. Without basic legal regulation, many cooperatives lack sound in-house operating mechanisms, putting members' economic rights and interests at risk. (XNA, 31 Oct 06)

Decision on Amending the Law on Supervising and Managing the Banking Industry,

adopted at the 24th meeting of the 10th NPC Standing Committee on 31 October 2006. (Presidential Decree No. 58, signed by State President Hu Jintao on 31 October 2006) (RMRB, 1 Nov 06)

China's top legislature adopted a law amendment to allow banking supervisory bodies to investigate non-financial institutions and individuals. The amendment to the law on banking regulation and supervision will come into effect on 1 January 2007. It is designed to strengthen supervision of the banking sector in face of rising foreign competition. (XNA, 31 Oct 06)

Decision on Amending the Organic Law of the People's Courts, adopted at the 24th meeting of the 10th NPC Standing Committee on 31 October 2006. (Presidential Decree No. 59, signed by State President Hu Jintao on 31 October 2006) (RMRB, 1 Nov 06)

China's top legislature adopted a change to the law on the country's court system requiring all death sentences to be approved by the Supreme People's Court.

The amendment to the country's organic law on the people's court will come into effect on 1 January 2007. It is believed to be the most important reform on capital punishment in China in more than 20 years.

The amendment deprives the provincial people's courts of the final say on issuing the death sentence, stipulating that death penalties handed out by provincial courts must be reviewed and ratified by the Supreme People's Court (SPC).

Xiao Yang, president of the Supreme People's Court, said the change will separate a review of a death sentence from a convicted person's appeal of the verdict. The former will be handled by the SPC while the later remains in the jurisdiction of provincial courts.

This, says Xiao, is "an important procedural step to prevent wrongful convictions".

"It will also give the defendants in death sentence cases one more chance to have their opinions heard," Xiao said.

The SPC was responsible for reviewing all death penalty cases until 1983 when, as part of a major crackdown on crime, provincial courts were given authority to issue final verdicts on death sentences for crimes that seriously endangered public security and social order, including homicide, rape, robbery and the criminal use of explosives. Chen Xianming, president of China University of Political Science and Law, said the revision was appropriate in the mid 1980s and helped to lower the country's crime rate.

Ministry of Public Security figures in September 1984 showed that the number of criminal cases from January to August that year dropped 31 per cent from the previous year.

However, the practice of provincial courts handling both death sentence appeals and conducting final reviews has encountered increasing criticism in recent years for causing miscarriages of justice.

Since 2005, China's media have exposed a series of errors in death sentence cases and criticized courts for their lack of caution in meting out capital punishment.

Law professor Chen Ruihua of the Peking University said the 1983 revision has resulted in "insufficient supervision" of death sentences. Chen said provincial courts may have different interpretations of which crimes are worthy of capital punishment. This meant someone convicted in one province may receive the death penalty while in another province the same crime would have resulted in a prison sentence.

"To take back the power of reviewing and ratifying all death sentences and prevent wrongful convictions has become an urgent issue for China to push forward judicial reform, safeguard legal consistency and promote judicial justice," said Chen.

Sources with the Supreme Court said the SPC had been considering depriving provincial courts of the right to ratify death sentences since the late 1990s.

In October 2005, the SPC issued its Second Five-Year (2006-2010) Reform Plan, announcing that it had decided to deprive provincial courts of this power according to the principle of "respecting and protecting human rights and exerting strict controls over the death penalty".

To prepare for the changes, the SPC has set up three new criminal tribunals since April this year to review death sentences handed out by provincial courts.

Staff for the three tribunals, who underwent a month of training in Beijing, were selected from regional courts by a rigorous examination process.

The SPC is also working on a plan to take in more experienced lawyers and law school teachers as senior judges.

Over 30 judges from higher and intermediary people's courts have been chosen for the first training course in Beijing. After three months of training, they would be on probation for a year before officially assuming office.

After a year of preparation, the SPC tabled the draft amendment to the top legislature last September, asking lawmakers to revise the law to allow the Supreme Court to take back the power.

In China, capital punishment falls into two categories - a death penalty with the criminal to be executed immediately after sentencing, and death with a two-year reprieve.

Over the years, the government has been urged by some countries to abolish the death sentence. Responding to such calls, Chief Justice Xiao Yang said that on many occasions, no articles in China's current laws stipulated that the country would abolish death sentence.

Xiao said China's policy is to keep death penalty but to use it with caution.

"In China, the death penalty is still an irreplaceable means to curb serious crime and protect public safety and property security," said Chen Zhonglin, a law professor with Southwest University of Political Science and Law.

Chen estimated that the number of death sentences in China would drop distinctly by at least 20 per cent after the SPC resumed its power to review and ratify all death sentences.

At present, over one third of the countries and regions in the world has the death penalty, covering half of the world's total population.

Chinese legal professionals believe China will eventually abolish the death penalty.

"China is on the direction of abolishing the death sentence. But it will take time," said Zhang Yumao, a member of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. (XNA, 31 Oct 06)

Regulations on Scenic Sites and Places of Interest, approved at the 149th executive meeting of the State Council on 6 September 2006. These regulations will come into effect on 1 December 2006.

(Decree No.474 of the PRC State Council, signed by Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council, on 19 September 2006) (Full text of the regulations: RMRB, 5 Nov 06) The regulations consist of seven chapters with 52 articles.

China will step up protection of its state-level nature reserves to crack down on activities such as film shooting and unauthorized tourism, according to a new regulation.

"The maintenance and management of state-level nature reserves should be evaluated by a State Council-authorized committee at least every five years," the China Youth Daily quoted the regulation as saying. It will come into effect on 1 December.

"If dereliction of duty, unapproved changes of the reserve area or unauthorized tourism are found at state-level natural reserves, the reserves will be officially warned or even revoked of their state-level status and related officials will be punished," said Zhou Shengxian, director of the State Environmental Protection Administration (SEPA).

"If the reserves lose their state-level status, they can not apply for it again for five years," said Zhou.

The regulation also said that environmental protection departments should carry out regular inspections of natural reserves to ensure deforestation, hunting, fishing, mining or film making, which are damaging the reserves, do not occur.

Ding Hushan nature reserve in south China's Guangdong Province, established in 1956, was China's first nature reserve. China now has 2,349 natural reserves, covering about 1.5m square kilometres or 15 per cent of China's land area, above the world average.

However, Zhou said, some local governments waiver nature reserve protection in favour of economic development.

The exploitation of nature reserves has been widely publicized. Director Chen Kaige's film "The Promise" was accused of littering and destroying vegetation at a scenic nature reserve in Shangrila of southwest China's Yunnan Province in 2004.

A provincial regulation imposed a fine of 90,000 yuan (11,250 US dollars) on the film production team. A local official was also fired for neglect of duty.

Experts criticized the local government for being too tolerant as the fine was only a small proportion of the film's total investment. (XNA, 31 Oct 06) approved at the 150th executive meeting of the State Council on 20 September 2006. This regulation will come into effect on 1 October 2006.

Regulation on Protecting the Great Wall,

(Decree No.476 of the PRC State Council, signed by Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council, on 11 October 2006) (Full text of the regulation: RMRB, 26 Oct 06) The regulation consist of 31 articles.

China issued a regulation on 24 October banning scribbling and driving on the Great Wall as part of a series of measures to protect the ancient wonder.

The regulation, promulgated by the State Council or central government, forbids taking soil or bricks from the Great Wall, planting trees, carving on the wall or building anything on the wall that is not designed to protect it.

It also bans the use of vehicles on the wall and the organization of activities on sections not open to tourists.

Individuals who breach the regulations are subject to fines of 10,000 to 50,000 yuan (1,250 to 6,250 US dollars) and institutions 50,000 to 500,000 yuan (6,250 to 62,500 dollars).

The regulation incites all citizens, legal entities and organizations to shoulder their legal obligations to protect the Great Wall.

The principle of "preserving the original appearance" is enshrined in the regulation which emphasizes that no construction projects are allowed in off-limits areas.

The regulation, which comes into effect on Dec. 1, 2006, said the state encourages citizens and organizations to donate money to Great Wall protection funds.

The Great Wall stretches 6,700 km from west to northeast China, traversing Gansu, Ningxia, Inner Mongolia, Shanxi, Shaanxi, Hebei and Liaoning.

Its construction dates back to the Warring States Period (475-221 B.C.), when separate sections were built in scattered strategic areas to defend China against invasion by northern nomadic tribes. (XNA, 24 Oct 06)

Following a string of scandals involving academic fraud and plagiarism this year, China issued a trial regulation on scientific misconduct on 9 November.

"This is the first time that a unified regulation has been issued to put scientific misconduct in the legal system," Mei Yonghong, director of the policy and regulation department of the Ministry of Science and Technology (MOST).

According to the regulation, the acts of falsifying resumes, plagiarizing works of others, fabricating scientific data, and violating regulations governing research on humans and animals will be given punishment ranging from warning, suspension of research projects, confiscating project funding and being expelled from research organizations.

"The heaviest punishment will be disqualification from state science projects for life," Mei said.

"The regulation will provide a legal basis for handling future scientific misconduct and serve as a warning to others," said Shang Yong, vice-minister of MOST.

When China has been advocating and pushing for innovation, the scientific community has been plagued by a number of high-profile scientific scandals.

Top scientist Chen Jin was in May sacked from the prestigious Shanghai Jiaotong University for faking data relating to a digital computer chip that was developed with state funding.

A professor at the elite Tsinghua University in Beijing, Liu Hui, was removed from his post in March for faking his academic achievements and work experience

In late April, Yang Jie, former director of the Life Science and Technology Institute at the prestigious Tongji University in Shanghai, was sacked after the veracity of his academic record was questioned.

Experts say it is not easy to completely eradicate scientific misconduct, but it can be minimized by strong preventive measures, fair competitions and greater transparency. (XNA, 9 Nov 06; SCMP, 10 Nov 06)

China's State Council on 15 November issued new regulations on foreign-funded banks which will take effect on 11 December, the date China is expected to fully open its banking sector to foreign competition. The new regulations, signed by Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao, were approved at the 155th executive meeting of the State Council on 8 November.

The new regulations lift restrictions on renminbi and foreign-currency transactions by solely foreign-funded banks and Sino-overseas joint venture banks. Chinese branches of foreign banks, however, are banned from engaging in renminbi services with Chinese citizens unless an individual, having obtained the approval of the banking regulatory body, makes a fixed deposit of no less than 1m yuan (127,000 US dollars). Solely foreign-funded banks and joint venture banks must have a minimum registered capital of 1bn yuan or the equivalent in hard foreign currencies. Chinese branches of foreign banks must have a minimum operating fund of 200m yuan or the equivalent in hard foreign currencies. Foreign financial institutions who apply to set up solely-owned banks in China must have had no less than 10bn dollars in total assets at the end of the previous year. Foreign banks who apply to set up branches must have had no less than 20bn dollars in total assets at the end of the previous year.

The regulations also apply to financial institutions registered in Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan. (XNA, 15 Nov 06)
