Pakistan (Oct 15)

Beijing, 15 Oct (Xinhua) - Chinese President Hu Jintao held talks with Pakistani President Zardari at the Great Hall of the People ... After the talks, the two countries' heads of state attended the signing ceremony for bilateral cooperation documents in fields of economy, technology, trade, mineral products, agriculture, environmental protection, telecommunication satellites, broadcast, film, and television. ... (Xinhua, 15 Oct 08, in BBC PF, 17 Oct 08)

Beijing, 16 Oct (Xinhua) - A responsible official from the PRC Ministry of Commerce disclosed on 16 October that China and Pakistan signed "an amending protocol to their free trade agreement" on 15 October, so as to push bilateral trade, economic, and technological cooperation.

It is reported that the signing of the amending protocol to the China-Pakistan free trade agreement was an important economic and trade achievement made by Pakistani President Zardari during his visit to China. According to the protocol, the two sides will give first consideration to the issue of cutting or eliminating, within the framework of the China-Pakistan free trade agreement, the tariffs on the goods manufactured by the China-Pakistan investment zones, including the Haier-Ruba economic zone; and the goods that the two sides would like to export. In addition, the 12 preferential treatments granted by the Pakistani side to the China-Pakistan investment zones serve as an annex to the amending protocol. The signing and implementation of the amending protocol will help speed up the construction of the China-Pakistan investment zones, including the Haier-Ruba economic zone; will attract ever increasingly more enterprises to build factories in the investment zones; and will further improve the bilateral economic and trade cooperation levels.

Pakistan is China's friendly neighbouring country. Over the past years, China and Pakistan have rapidly developed their bilateral trade, economic, and technological cooperation. In the year of 2006, the two countries signed a free trade agreement, with the focus on trade in goods. The China-Pakistan FTA, which was put in force on 1 July 2007, has been well implemented. Meanwhile, the two countries held four rounds of negotiations on FTA in service sectors, to exchange views on the further opening of the major service sectors, the personnel flow, and the draft of the service trade agreement. The two sides have extensively reached consensus. (Xinhua, 16 Oct 08, in BBC PF, 19 Oct 08)

DAKAR, Oct. 17 (Xinhua) - China signed a trade deal with Senegal to offer zero-tariff treatment to more than 400 categories of goods imported from Senegal.

The agreement was inked by Chinese Ambassador to Senegal Lu Shaye and Senegalese Minister for Commerce Mamadou Diop in Dakar, Senegal's capital.

The trade deal will elevate their bilateral trade and economic ties to a new stage and will also foster people-to-people exchanges between the two sides, said Lu.

The two peoples will benefit from the agreement which raised the number of tariff-free Senegalese export products to China from about 190 in 2005 to more than 600, the Chinese ambassador added.

Diop said that the agreement was of great significance for the two countries to strengthen their economic and trade cooperation.

Friendly bilateral cooperation in various fields, particularly in trade and economy, has been booming since China and Senegal resumed diplomatic ties in October 2005, the minister said.

More Senegalese are now running businesses or have started their own enterprises in China, he said, adding that he welcomed more Chinese businessmen to make investment in Senegal.

At the Beijing Summit of the China-Africa Cooperation Forum in 2006, the Chinese government pledged to further open China's market to exports from Africa's least developed countries by raising the number of products enjoying zero-tariff treatment from 190 to 440. (XNA, 18 Oct 08)

The 17th item of the new rules said foreign reporters need to gain agreement from the person or organization to be interviewed while they are working in China.

It cancelled an item in the old version that asked foreign reporters to get approval from the local government's foreign affairs department when they wanted to cover news in the regions open to them.

The new rules also lifted an item asking them to get approval from the Foreign Ministry when they wanted to visit the regions not open to them and register at the police.

China removed restrictions on foreign reporters during the Beijing Olympic Games as a special arrangement. The new rules make that temporary arrangement a standard practice.

According to the new rules, permanent offices of foreign media and reporters can "temporarily" import, install and use radio communication devices for news reporting after gaining approvals from the Chinese government according to laws.

"China adopts a basic policy of opening up to the outside world, protects the lawful rights and interests of the permanent offices of foreign media organizations and foreign journalists in accordance with law, and facilitates their news coverage and reporting activities that are carried out according to law," the new rules said.

The rules asked resident foreign reporters to apply for a press card to the Foreign Ministry or local foreign affairs departments within seven working days after their arrival in China.

With press cards, they also need to get residency cards from the local police where they are to stay.

Press cards of those who stay in China for less than six months every year will be revoked, the document said.

Resident foreign reporters or those for short-term news reporting in China shall apply a journalist visa.

The new rules do not ask resident foreign reporters to renew their press cards annually.

Permanent offices of foreign media and reporters may hire Chinese citizens to do auxiliary work but have to hire them organizations designated by the Foreign Ministry or local governments to provide services to foreign nationals, according to the new rules.

The new rules took effect from Oct. 17. (XNA, 17 Oct 08)

Beijing, Sept. 18 (Xinhua) - China's State Council, or the cabinet, announced the abolishment of regulations on inspection exemptions for food. In a circular distributed to ministries and governments at all levels, the cabinet said that it had decided to abolish the regulations relating to quality inspection exemptions for food in a document issued on December 5, 1999. It urged the ministries and governments to step up supervision, perform their duties strictly and carry out food quality inspections in line with relevant laws to ensure food safety. (XNA, 18 Sep 08)

According to a 10 October Xinhua Asia-Pacific report by reporter Chen Fei, the State Council's "Regulations for the Quality Supervision and Control of Dairy Products," which were promulgated on 9 October, stipulated that supervision bodies should run regular checks on dairy products, publicize channels for public tip-offs, and introduce a "black list" system against manufacturers and business operators who were engaged in illegal production and sales of dairy products.

The Regulations defined a division of labour as well as responsibilities among supervision bodies, including administrations for quality inspection, supervision, and quarantine, administrations for industry and commerce, administrations for food and drugs, and public health bodies. The Regulation also laid out specific disciplinary punishments and criminal sanctions against officials who had committed diligence in work, violations of relevant rules, and power abuses. (XNA, 10 Oct 08)

BEIJING, Oct. 10 (Xinhua) - China's State Council issued a series of quality control regulations for dairy products on 9 October. The move was prompted by the country's contaminated milk scandal.

The regulations tighten control of how milk-yielding animals are bred, how raw milk is purchased and the production and sales of dairy food.

There will also be more severe punishment for people who violate safety standards and quality control departments that fail to fulfil duties.

Relevant officials will also be punished if dairy food safety incidents occur.

The regulations state that quality watchdogs will now be required to carry out regular inspections of dairy products. Law-breaking producers will be blacklisted and outted publicly.

Health authorities under the State Council will now be responsible for setting up national safety standards for dairy foods. Those standards will limit pathogenic animalcule, pesticide residue, veterinary drug residue and other hazardous substances in dairy products. There will also be new hygiene requirements for dairy producers along with standardized national quality testing methods.

"Any non-food chemicals or hazardous substances are prohibited from being added into raw milk in its production, purchase, storage, transport and sales," the State Council said.

Raw milk-purchasing stations will now need approval from local authorities to operate. The regulations state that stations should be run by dairy food producers, milk-yielding animal farms or milk farm cooperatives. Other organizations and individuals are banned from collecting raw milk

The new regulations go into effect on 9 October.

Also this week, the Ministry of Health issued new limits on melamine levels in dairy products. A maximum 2.5 milligrams per kilogram was allowed for liquid milk, milk powder and food products containing at least 15 per cent milk.

Contaminated baby formula has killed at least three infants in China and left more than 53,000 children with urinary tract problems, including kidney stones.

So far, 27 people have been arrested over the scandal. (XNA, 10 Oct 08)
